About

Innovation in agriculture is helping Canadian farmers become more productive and sustainable than ever before. As president and CEO of CroLife Canada, my mission is to support our members and advocate for political and regulatory frameworks that continue to enable cutting edge agricultural technologies to come to market in Canada.

I am responsible for the strategic direction and leadership of our organization. As an industry we are often faced with misinformation about agricultural technologies like pesticides and plant breeding innovations such as GMOs. I strongly believe in our role, working in partnership with the broader agricultural industry, in telling the positive story of modern agriculture. I am also a firm believer in the power of collaboration when it comes to advancing the common interests of the agriculture industry, which is why we work closely with our partners in the GrowCanada partnership.

I'm energised about the future of Canadian agriculture because over the last few decades we've experienced dramatic change, fueled in large part by technological advancements. While farmers are facing some enormous challenges in their efforts to grow food for the world, I'm optimistic that the ingenuity of farmers and the innovation in the plant science industry will make for a bright future for agriculture and food production.

Julian Smith  · 3rd

Vice President - Energy & Sustainability Canada

November 9, 2012. Luis was senior to Julian but didn't manage Julian directly

Luis was a large part of helping me assimilate myself into the laboratory setting. His clear and direct direction along with his broad knowledge of biochemical engineering was clearly on display during the entirety of my work term. It was a pleasure working with Luis while I had the opportunity.
